Wakasa was a province of pre-modern Japan, serving as a gateway to the Asian continent, as well as an important transportation hub connecting to the ancient capitals to the south. The area gained power, resulting in many regional clans. They left a number of burial mounds, which are now a valued heritage of Japan's ancient history, and many are designated as National or Prefectural Historic Sites, like the 100-meter-long Kaminotsuka Burial Mound, the largest in this region, as well as burial mounds holding ancient Korean artifacts, adding proof of ties here with the Asian continent. Romantic image of ancient Japan are evoked in Wakasa.
